Sexual harassment doesn't mean rape, it can be but it can also be something so simple as talking in a way that makes the other person uncomfortable.

Seminar Report on Anti-Ragging and III Effects

A seminar on anti-ragging and the effects of ragging was organised by IBS for 2022 batch students. HK Nandini, a consultant, child and adolescent psychologist, innovative curriculum developer, and life coach, served as the event's chief guest and speaker. Prof. Kuldeep Sharma, Director of IBS, opened the event in Seminar Hall 1.

The speaker spoke to the audience, emphasising the negative effects of ragging. She gave the students an explanation of what exactly constitutes ragging, why it is illegal, and who can be held accountable for it. The silent witness would also be held equally accountable addition to the wrongdoers.

Speaker explained for decades, ragging has been discussed and studied, but we have neglected to understand the psychological underpinnings of this scourge. About 20 years ago, we started to recognise ragging as a problem and start looking for a solution. She also talked about misconceptions that support the idea of ragging, including (a) Many think that ragging helps to break the ice between seniors and freshmen; it fosters friendships; others claim it fosters emotional bonds between students; (b) Many think that ragging helps students develop their personalities; it helps them overcome their shyness; and it prepares them for life in the real world. And it's not just college students who hold this belief—many professors who teach in universities and colleges, people who attended college years ago, or even people who never attended but simply heard about the benefits of ragging blindly hold this belief.

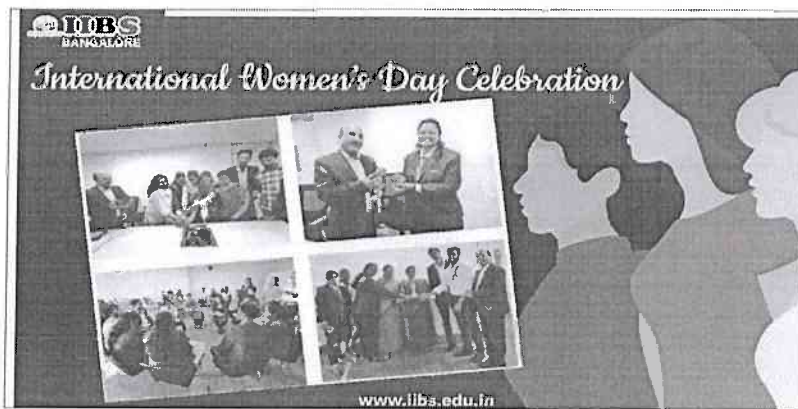

She told the students that in order to stop ragging, we must dispel all myths about it, challenge the underlying assumptions that encourage it, and teach our children to respect and be sensitive to the diversity and differences in our society. The speaker warned the students that after reflecting on ragging, we would simply detest being associated with it, be forced to reconsider the benefits of ragging we believe in, be forced to reconsider the reasons we give for supporting ragging and that this would eventually cause ragging to die naturally due to our way of thinking and use of logic.

The speaker engaged students in role-playing activities while also answering their questions. Overall, the session was interesting and engaging. A special session with the speaker, a psychologist, was held for all the female students following the session. The girls received individualised counseling sessions and had their questions answered. Additionally, it helped many students gain more self-confidence.

International Women's Day Celebration

On March 8, 2022, students of IIBS prepared a unique programme to mark International Women's Day. The event's guest of honour was Prof. Kuldeep Sharma, Director. On Women's Day, he gave a short address. He advised women to achieve new heights in all areas of their lives. He praised modern women for succeeding in equal measure with males and competing with men in all fields. Students organised a situation analysis, quiz, and debate competition for all students on this particular day.

Quiz competitions are always entertaining and educational, generating excitement among students. The primary goal of this quiz was to familiarise pupils with recent general knowledge about women's empowerment. Women's empowerment entails granting women the same status as men and granting them the ability to make their own decisions. In truth, there should be equal rights and laws for all, regardless of gender. In the first two rounds, students prepared questions on some of India's government programmes aimed at women's empowerment, while the last round focused on current events.

"Gender equality today for a sustainable tomorrow" was the debate's theme. There were six contestants in each of the five teams. Within the time limit, each team had to talk for or against the chosen issue. As the competition began, we could tell that the competitors were thoroughly prepared and eager to win.

They also did a situation analysis task that included conflict resolution, corporate behaviour, and spontaneous derivations. Decisions that have been thoroughly considered are preferable. This is when a situation assessment comes in handy. A Situation Analysis can be done at any time, but it's especially important before implementing a new process or starting a project. It assists you in determining the optimal course of action and moving forward without wasting time or effort by repeating mistakes.

It was a great event organised by MBA students, and at the conclusion of the session, prizes were presented to the participants who excelled in the competition.
